Jersey Court to Pass on Bruno's Case on Saturday
Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN
HERE is the kind of news-item that causes a prohibitionist to get a law passed and at the same time ruin any chance of ever enforcing that law. The news-item is by Neal O'Hara, nationally-syndicated writer appearing in many papers, including the New York Evening Post, whose clipping I have. The item is brief and to the point. "Fill 'em up again, pardner," says the unsympathetic Mr. O'Hara, "In proportion to its population, Arkansas is the hardest drinking area of the states and territories when it comes to consuming whisky."

Law does not change habit. But wise law-makers take habit into reckoning when the bill is being drafted. Excessive drinking is no argument for statutory prohibition. Rather, it is a powerful argument in support of the Star's position, that since the traffic can not be suppressed it should be controlled.

The control argument is rejected in its entirety by the radical prohibition leaders who are determined to carry Arkansas back to the outlawed, tax-free status that liquor enjoyed here for nearly 20 years.

All figures and all arguments in behalf of fair taxation, public morals and the public safety are against the prohibitionists—but they are undaunted.

It goes down in the record, undisputed, that drinking among women and among high school students was relatively light until prohibition came along and furnished a "thrill." And these prohibition-drinkers, fed originally on moonshine, have naturally carried over to the present day.

Although most of the Southern states were still technically dry in 1935 the South that year showed an increase of 3 per cent in auto fatalities, while the Eastern states were reducing their average 3 per cent. This contradicts the prohibitionists' entire theory, and rightly so—we solve one thing at a time, and highway safety is obtained only by highway patrols and some workable system of liquor control.

Prohibition ignores problems it doesn't solve.

14 Are Indicted by Nevada Jury
Circuit Court Adjourned by Judge Bush Until Next Thursday

PRESCOTT, Ark. — Judge Dexter Bush adjourned circuit court Thursday night until next Thursday when three civil and six criminal cases are set for trial. The grand jury adjourned after returning 14 indictments.

Mrs. C. T. Turner recovered judgment for $1,000 against Kroger Grocer & Bakery Co. A similar suit for her son, Humphrey Turner, resulted in a verdict for the company. The Turners live near Arkadelphia.

Roberta Simpson, negro, was acquitted by a jury of a charge that he killed Fred Scott, also a negro, in a dice game last August.

Seven negro boys drew one year sentences in the Negro Boys Industrial School on pleas of guilty to stealing brass fittings from Prescott & Northwestern Railroad Co. Dock Giles negro, convicted of stealing cottonseed, received a two-year sentence, and Hubert Leake, negro, one year for stealing timber.

Detailed reasons for sparing Hauptmann's life were given by the writer, whose script from beginning to end showed peculiarities linking unmistakably with the sub-treasury slip. The handwriting experts' report, completed after more than a week's study, was turned over late Thursday. Hoffmann declined to comment, but his secretary, William Conklin, indicated that the new evidence will be considered by the Court of Pardons when that tribunal meets at 10:30 a. m. Saturday.

Process Tax Off, Hogs Go to Town
Biggest Movement to Market in Year Causes Prices to Drop

CHICAGO, (AP)—With hogs flooding the nation's livestock markets and pork prices pointing downward, market adjustment to the lifting of the processing tax with AAA invalidation continued in a spectacular manner Thursday.

Producers and consumers alike sought benefit from the removal of the $2.25 per hundredweight tax, which constituted a portion of the packers' cost on every 100 pounds of hogs processed.

Seeking to profit from the upturn in hog prices that followed Monday's supreme court ruling, farmers sent the largest number of swine to principal corn belt markets since late in 1934. The price structure was shaken only moderately. Under normal conditions large marketings result in a definite break in prices.

The seven major slaughtering centers in the corn belt got 73,500 hogs, bringing the total for the week to date to 321,000, compared with 117,000 for the corresponding period last week and 203,300 a year ago.

Chicago prices dipped 15 to 25 cent at the opening but this was regained and heavy hogs closed five to 10 cent higher. The extreme top was $10.05, compared with a $9.50 top just before the AAA was voided. Other markets regained part of the early losses recorded there. Chicago's supply totalled 32,000, the largest since December 18, 1934.

61.89 per cent, are tabulated as baling "no."

The vote in support of the New Deal has declined from 46.72 per cent in the first report to 32.11 per cent in this week's tabulation.

Thirty-six states, which represent 399 out of a total of 531 electoral votes, continue to express disapproval of the Administration's policies in the latest returns. The other twelve, all Southern and border states with the exception of Utah, still voice approval of the President's policies.

The additional ballots tabulated currently indicate a large affirmative vote for the New Deal in eleven states and a decreased percentage in the thirty-seven other states since the previous week's report. The only sharp declines are noted in New York and New Hampshire.

Mississippi and South Carolina give a 70-30 per cent majority for the New Deal, while six other states give a 60-40 per cent approval and four more states show a percentage of 50-50 in support of the Administration's policies.

Massachusetts is the only state registering more than 80 per cent disapproval of the New Deal. The five other New England states and New Jersey are showing voting 70-30 per cent negatively. Fifteen more states are in the 60-40 per cent bracket and the balance of fourteen states are baling 50-50 per cent against the Administration's policies.

A close vote is indicated in only five states. New Mexico with a 53-46 per centage, Oklahoma with a 52-48 per centage and Florida with 50-50 per cent against the New Deal; Utah with a 54-46 per centage and Virginia with a 52-48 per cent vote in support of the New Deal. All other states give over 55 per cent majority for or against.

Morgan House Chief a Man of Many Moods

Summoned before the senate munitions inquiry to tell the part he played in financing the World War, J. Pierpont Morgan was cast in the role of a history-making magnate, whose every tug at the world's purse strings swayed the fate of nations. Here the all-seeing candid camera records what Morgan's inquisitors and the spectators crowding the hearing chamber actually saw—a mild-mannered titan of powerful build, who restlessly smoked pipe and cigars, smiled genially, scratched his scalp, rubbed his chin. Formerly an awesome name and little more, the candid camera strips him of the last shred of fearsomeness with which his reclusiveness once cloaked him.

2 Local Prisoners Sent to Rock Pile

Negro Chicken Thief and Fighter Are Shipped to Pulaski County

Leon Jackson and Joe Kelley, local negroes, were taken to the Pulaski county rock pile Thursday to work out fines for theft of chickens and for simple assault.

Jackson was charged with chicken stealing. Kelley was convicted for simple assault. Sheriff Bearden announced that he had made arrangements to commit persons convicted on misdemeanor charges here to the Pulaski rock pile.

2 More Arrested in Local Robbery

Curtis Cooper, William Cannon Taken in DeVaughn Store Raid

Curtis Cooper and William Cannon, negroes, sought for weeks in connection with the Lee DeVaughn robbery here, were arrested Thursday in Hot Springs and were returned to Hope for trial, by Sheriff Jim Bearden.

Cooper had been arrested previously. He walked out of the municipal court room here three weeks ago while waiting trial. His whereabouts were unknown until Thursday.

The negro Cannon has been at large since the robbery. He was arrested at Mountain Pine, near Hot Springs, by Sheriff Bearden, Deputy R. O. Robins, and Arch Cooper, captain of the Hot Springs police department.

Cooper and Cannon will be given a hearing in municipal court next Monday. They are the last of five negroes to be arrested in the case. The other three are held in jail or under bond.

The DeVaughn second-hand store was robbed several weeks ago of approximately $200 in merchandise, most of which was recovered.

ALLOTMENT, CHOICE

Chester Davis Personally Favors the Domestic Allotment Plan

The vote on passage was announced as 355 to 59. The bill was backed by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans.

Philadelphia Gets Convention Choice

Democrats to Meet in Pennsylvania Metropolis for First Time

WASHINGTON.—(P)—The Democratic National Convention late Thursday selected Philadelphia for its 1936 national convention.

The Pennsylvania city, never before the scene of a Democratic convention, won out over San Francisco and Chicago when its representatives finally offered a certified check for $200,000. Then, to meet higher bids, Philadelphia concessions estimated to raise the total to between $250,000 and $300,000 were offered.

Party Chairman James A. Farley announced the convention, intended to renominate President Roosevelt, would start June 23. The Republican party will meet in Cleveland beginning June 9.

Farley, in opening the National Committee's meeting, predicted a "campaign of defamation" financed by the "largest slush fund on record."

"Just remember as we go into the campaign," he told the delegates, "that Franklin D. Roosevelt is the hope of every man who suffers and the foe of every man who does wrong."

Lessons in Law-Making

By the Associated Press

12. Does Oratory Pay?

Legislation usually is little influenced by the flood of oratory which accompanies it.

Measures enacted by any congress are largely those originating with or sponsored by the majority party. Important legislation brought up for consideration in either house has had the careful scrutiny and a favorable report of a well-organized committee.

Most of the debate, therefore, has little bearing on the outcome.

Frequently members of congress, especially in the house, seek to extend their remarks in the Congressional Record. Once permission is granted for inserting a speech in the Record it is available for material to constituents.

Such speeches usually are printed in the government printing office and the member is charged the cost price. The costs to members of congress for printing speeches runs into thousands of dollars annually, despite the fact the material is carried free of charge in the mails. One year congressmen paid $61,000 in printing costs. The senate is more lenient because of the custom of "senatorial courtesy" in the matter of extending speeches in the Record than is the house. Last of a series.

Japan to Reserve Filipino Pledge

Won't Commit Self to Preserve Independence of Pacific Islands

TOKYO, Japan.—(P)—A strong indication that the Japanese government is adverse to any pact among the Pacific powers, guaranteeing the independence and neutrality of the Philippines, was given Friday by a high official source.

The spokesman declined to say definitely whether Japan would refuse to conclude such a pact.

Naval Parley Continues

LONDON, Eng.—(Copyright Associated Press)—British official circles said Friday if Japan withdraws from the international naval conference the parley will not collapse but will become a six-power conference with the inclusion of Germany and Soviet Russia.

Reliable sources reported that Great Britain and the United States had reached an agreement to return to the consideration of Japan's demand for equality.

Standard Driver's License Is Urged

Has Reduced Traffic Fatalities 25% in States Adopting It

RUSSELLVILLE, Ark.—"Why not a standard driver's license law in Arkansas?" was one of the questions presented to Miss Marian Telford of New York city, member of the National Safety Council, at the first session of the Russellville Civic Forum Wednesday night.

Discussing the standard license law, which would require drivers to pass mental and physical tests, Miss Telford said traffic fatalities in states where this law had been enacted have shown a decrease of approximately 25 per cent. States not having the law have experienced increases in fatalities from 6 to 15 per cent.

"The modern automobile is too powerful to be turned over to just anybody," Miss Telford said. "The public cannot settle back and take accidents as a matter of course. There is a cause back of every accident."

Statistics show an increase in arrests for driving while drunk, the increase ranging from 3 per cent the last year of prohibition to 13 per cent for the first year of repeal, Miss Telford said. This increase may be due in part, however, to more rigid law enforcement, she said.

Take Moonshiner at River Crossing

Lee Hilton Arrested at Fulton by Deputies—Held for Federals

Lee Hilton, white, of Fulton, was held by the sheriff's department Friday for sale and possession of illegal whisky.

He was arrested at Fulton Thursday night by Deputies Reginald Bearden and William Robins. Officers said they used an "informant" to capture Hilton while making sale of a gallon of moonshine.

Officers said that Hilton, later, attempted to cross Red river in a boat with 10 gallons of moonshine. Realizing that he would be trapped on the Hempstead side, Hilton dumped the cargo in the river, officers said.

Hilton will be charged with selling and possessing liquor on which no tax had been paid, and will be given a hearing in federal court at Texarkana in the near future, officers said.

Own Money Used to Sterilize Girl

Ann Cooper Hewitt Pictured as "Crazy About Men in Uniform"

TRENTON, N. J. — Ann Cooper Hewitt's own money financed the operation which deprived her of motherhood, Chancery Court records here indicated Thursday.

This sordid trick of fate occurred because the $15,000 needed to pay the surgeons and hospital bills had been taken from a trust fund set up for the girl by her father, the late Peter Cooper Hewitt.

The girl herself supported by implication the application for money for the operation costs. She filed a supplemental affidavit declaring she ought to be allowed to draw money whenever she needed it, without making it necessary for her mother to interfere.

"I do not wish my mother worried about me any more than she has been," her affidavit said.

The papers were filed by the Newark law firm of Lum, Tamblin and Fairlie. The Chancery Court records failed to show whether the $15,000 was allowed. Court attaches, however, believed it was.

Another affidavit filed several days ago in Chancery Court as Hackensack, portrayed the girl as a giddy, loveless young woman, easily infatuated by men in uniform.

"About four years ago, while we were living in Riverwood, Calif., Mrs. McCarter said, 'Ann became infatuated with our chauffeur.'"

"He persuaded her to prepare to run away with him and encouraged Ann to write letters to him. The chauffeur told me he had such letters. It was necessary to secure possession of them and I did so."

The Truth About Diet

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Truth About Health

One who lives on a diet completely free from vitamin A develops infections principally in the mucous membranes which line the walls of the breathing tract and of the intestines. This fact caused one investigator to call vitamin A the anti-infective vitamin. This was in error, because people got the idea that the taking of large amounts of vitamin A would prevent colds and similar infections.

While it is true that a shortage of vitamin A will injure the mucous membrane and make infections more likely, it is not true that the taking of large quantities of vitamin A will prevent infections by the germs which bring about a cold.

The mechanism by which we resist infection is complicated. It concerns the condition of the blood. Much more study is necessary before we know exactly how a deficiency of vitamin A is associated with infection.

The evidence leads to the view that the likelihood of infection is not, as a rule, affected by diet nearly as much as it is affected by exposure of the body to virulent sources of infection. But the ability of the body to resist infection can be greatly reduced by a diet that lacks the necessary elements.

A most interesting recent discovery established the fact that vitamin A is developed from the substance called carotene, which is found particularly in the yellow coloring matter of carrots and butter.

Carrots and sweet potatoes were found to be rich sources of vitamin A, while white turnips and Irish potatoes

Today's Health Question

Q.—How are cereals malted? Does malting cause a cereal to be digested more easily?

A.—The malting of grain consists in allowing it to germinate in a warm, moist room, converting a large part of the starchy material in the grain into dextrin and sugar (maltose). The process is arrested by heating the grain when dry. Malted grains are somewhat more easily digested than unmalted ones.

furnish but little. Now carotene has been developed in the form of crystals and is called pro-vitamin A.

Skimmed milk is deficient in vitamin A as compared with whole milk, because vitamin A is fat soluble and is removed with the cream. A growing child, receiving a quart of milk each day, or a pint of milk and one-third of an ounce of butter, gets all the vitamin A it needs for support and development of its body and for its resistance.

Grown-ups do not require as many units of vitamin A as do children. The average grown-up who takes from 20 to 3000 calories in his diet, requires about the same number of units of vitamin A. A quart of milk provides 1000 units, and a teaspoonful of cod liver oil more than 2000 units.

Anyone who regularly gets milk, butter, eggs, fish, liver, or kidney, fruits and leafy green vegetables will have all the vitamin A he needs for purposes of health and growth.

A Book a Day

By Bruce Catton

There is something encouraging about such a book as "The Partnership Way Out," by Ambrose Ryder. Written by a successful business man—the author is assistant vice president of a large insurance company—it proves that the American business community can produce both the ability to see the defects in our present economic system and the intelligence to suggest remedies for them.

Mr. Ryder points out that the whole social and economic organization of America can be looked on as a vast partnership and this partnership, he says, has not been doing well of late. Specifically, it has been bringing its members an average return of about $1000 a year, whereas it should easily bring in two or three times that amount.

This, he says, calls for a collective examination of the difficulties and a collective effort to solve them. But we need not choose, he goes on, between collectivism and individualism; rather, we can have both—for the most rugged individualism works better if its teamwork is functioning. So he goes on to suggest ways in which the proper blend of collectivism and individualism can be attained. He is not in the least afraid of such current bogies as "economic planning," he insists that the American people have the good sense to evolve a plan which will enable them to make a wider and fairer distribution of their country's riches, without sacrificing their democracy or submitting to a meddling, bureaucratic paternalism.

You may not agree with all his suggestions, but you will find his book stimulating, intelligently conceived, and logically worked out.

Published by Harpers, it sells for $2.50.

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

Fear is an odd thing. Very odd. Psychologists give reasons for it and explain how some fears are born in us and others are caused by early frights. But can you explain this one about a child whose mother asked my opinion?

She had been telling her little girl about furies and how nice and kind they were. All along the child had said nothing about it, but gradually her mother began to realize that this strange small creature, no more than a fairy herself, wasn't any too fond of elves that slid down moonbeams or ladies with stars on their foreheads who waved hands and changed frogs into princes.

The crisis was reached one day when Sally suddenly burst into tears and went wailing from the room. The story her mother had been telling her smacked strongly of "Tom, the Water-Baby" from the brief description. Anyway, it was about a little green man who told Tommy (or Billy, that all he had to do was to go right in after it, down to the bottom of the pond. There he would not only find his ball, but see how the fishes kept house.

Land of "Let's Pretend"

Why should Sally weep over this? Mother was puzzled. She said nothing, but thought it out. It wasn't the story, she was sure. It had nothing morbid about it. And Sally liked water. She knew no boy with the same name, so it could not be that. There were no more stories for a while.

Then one day Sally said to her, "Mummy, tell me a little story."

"But not about fairies," inquired mummy.

"Not about fairies. But just let's pretend they are fairies. I like to pretend things."

After that her mother began each story with, "Let's pretend that there was a little girl who—" Or, "Let's pretend there was a cross old bear—" And Sally was no longer disturbed. As long as little squirrels did not "really" talk or bake pies out of acorns, she was able to hear.

One day she said, "Mummy, let's play 'Three Little Pigs.'"

This was a new one. But her mother got behind the door where Sally pushed her. Sally said, "Now let's pretend you're the big bad wolf. I'm a little pig. You have to huff-and-puff and blow me up. And then you eat me, and then I'll be the other pig and you fall in my pot and I'll cook you."

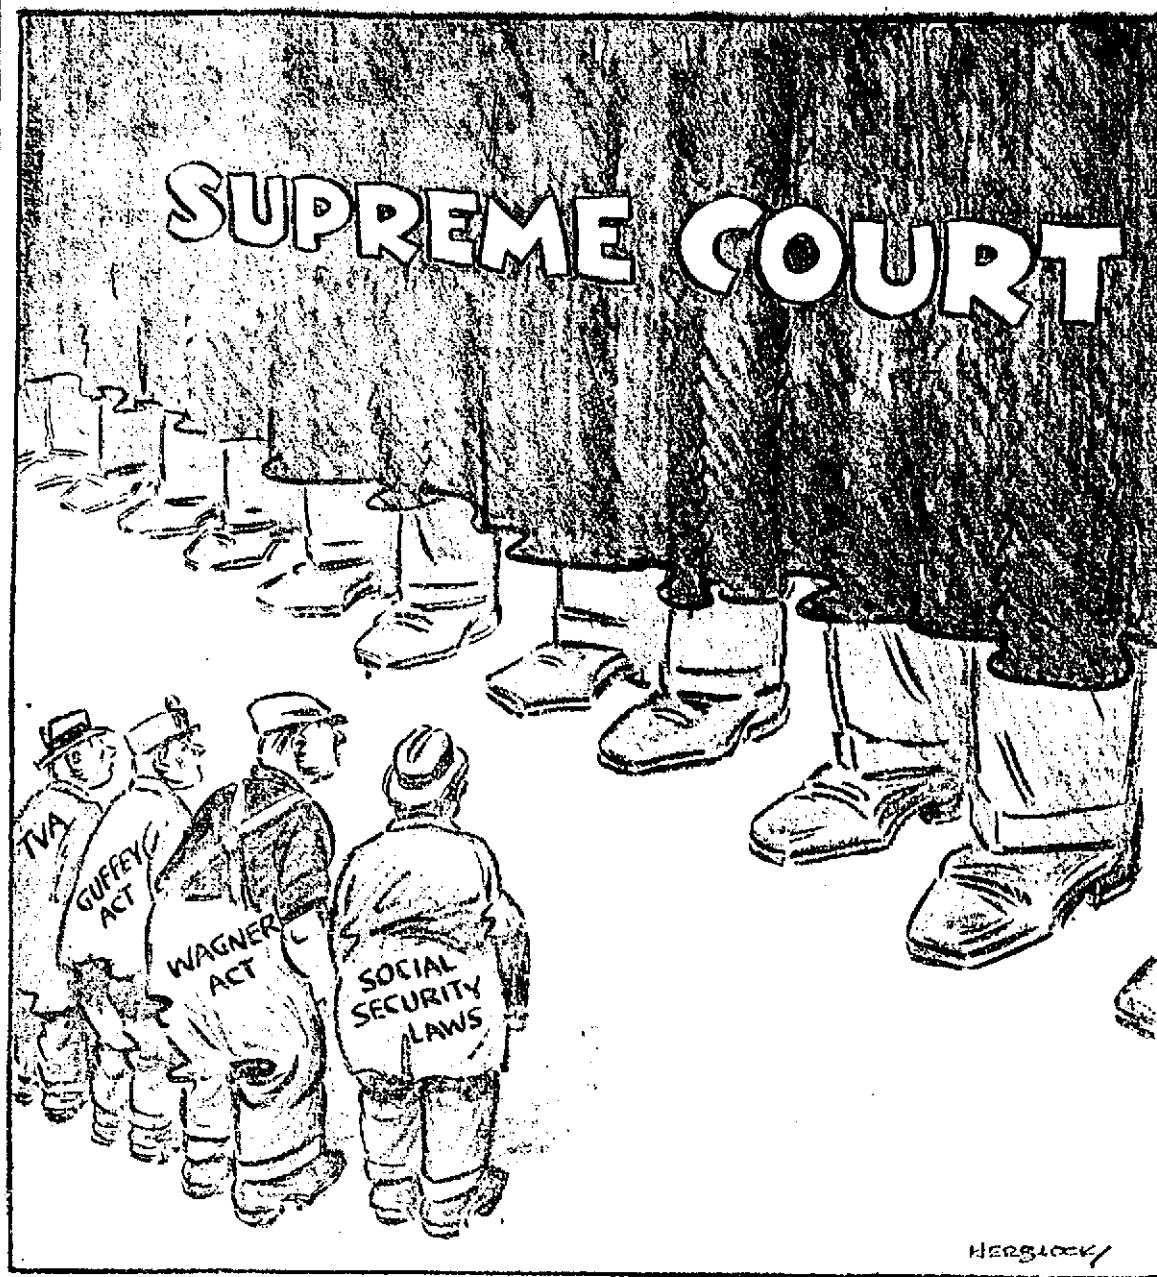

Imagine this lady's amazement. But she carried out the pantomime and was still further astonished when her sanguinary daughter slit open her stomach and hauled out the other two pigs and began to dance about and sing. "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?" She laughed and had a great time. Sally did, because this blood-thirsty story was "just pretend." Sally is not five yet, and this story is exactly as it happened. Fear? Yes. We should discriminate always when telling certain children stories. It is nothing against the fairy tale, but more in the way it is presented at the sensitive child.

Glorifying Yourself

By Alicia Hart

The day before you start on a winter holiday trip is decidedly NOT the time to have your hairdresser design an intricate coiffure. Given a free hand he probably can make you look like a picture of a screen actress coming down a gangplank, but how long will your hair stay that way? Not for more than the time it takes you to pace once around a windswept deck. I'm afraid, so you'd better stick to a simple hairdress and one that will be as nice for dancing after dinner as for deck tennis in the morning. More and more simple hairstyles that are waved softly backward from the face (what's more, can be combed backward with your own two hands) are catching on. If you haven't tried one of this type, you might do so the week before you start on your trip. If you don't like you can go back to your old style when you get your hair done again the day before sailing date.

Anyway, don't be persuaded to go on a cruise with dozens of ringlets that will have to be whipped into shape by the ship's hairdresser before dinner each night. In the first place, so many appointments will break your budget. Secondly, you'll miss the 3 o'clock "horse races" in the main lounge. Also, likely as not the curls won't stay in over night and you'll have to breakfast in bed, thereby making the young man you're trying to impress think you are the kind of girl who gets senile.

You might consider a plain, unwaved coiffure with halo braid. If your hair is long, this will be practical all day long. If short, wear it straight during the day, pin up the ends and fasten the braid around your head for evening. If you're one who likes to stroll around the deck between dances, don't forget a Juliet cap or some kind of evening hat or veil to keep your hair in place.

A safety rug now on the market will not slip on highly polished floors because of a rubber cushion on which the rug is built.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
DANA STANLEY, divorced from her husband, DR. SCOTT STANLEY, is making plans to marry rich RONALD MOORE, who has come to love with her several years.

Dana had left her husband, believing him to love with "PAUL LONG. Scott believes Dana left him because he was poor.

After the separation, he becomes a partner of the town's outstanding physician, DR. OSBORNE.

CHAPTER XLV
The middle-aged man drenched reaching the wreckage a few yards away. There would, probably, be little he could do.

But he saw, as he came closer, that one driver had used his head at the fatal moment. He had turned his car so that the engine of the other automobile had struck the side and not the front.

This chap, he saw, too, had escaped in some almost miraculous fashion and was lifting the driver of the outboard car from the tangled mass.

The middle-aged man said, "That was a sorry smash. You're lucky, is that poor chap dead?"

"No," Scott said, "he's badly hurt. But he isn't dead. Thank God."

"We'd better get him to a doctor at once," the stranger said.

"I'm a doctor," Scott replied. "A hospital is what we need. I'm going to take time to bandage a gash in his head, if a surgical case I have isn't smashed to bits."

The stranger stooped and held the unconscious man's head while Scott explored the back of his wrecked car. The case was located in the tangled mass, and Scott bandaged the ugly cut quickly.

"The best thing," Scott said straightening, "is to phone from the first house and have an ambulance come out and meet us."

They lifted the unconscious youth into the stranger's car and started on, Scott supporting the boy in his arms. If the kid died, he would never forgive himself. The boy had been on the wrong side of the road, driving with the recklessness, the carelessness of careless youth. But it took two to make an accident. He, himself, had taken a dozen risks since he left Easton. He had let his car out to 70 a number of times, holding it around 65 generally.

THE thought of Dana was like a sharp, stabbing pain. Now he could not go to her as he had planned. He must take the boy straight to an emergency room, determine the extent of his injuries and get to work.

A thought came like a reprieve from sentence. Any of his friends would be glad to help him. Some of them would be making casual rounds, and any one of them would drive out and bring Dana to him.

He knew, with a sense of deep conviction, that if he asked her to come, nothing could keep her away.

They were driving steadily and fairly fast. But not fast enough for Scott. Minutes in a case like this counted. He wanted to change places with the conservative, middle-aged driver. This time, with all his faculties alert and sharpened by the experience just past, there would be no danger in traveling fast.

Blood had soaked through the bandage on the boy's head and was staining Scott's coat. There was so much blood on his own clothing it would be hard for an ordinary observer to tell which of the two was most hurt.

They had reached a lighted house. Scott was praying there would be a telephone. He could hear his companion pounding on the door. Then the door swung wide and a flood of light poured through.

"An ambulance is starting to meet us," the middle-aged man reported when he returned.

"What time have you?" Scott asked.

"Six-thirty. I figure you'll be at the hospital at least by seven."

The number had a dark sound to Scott.

Dr. Osborne had not specified any particular time. He had said Dana and Ronnie were to be married tonight. That could mean they had set 8 o'clock as the hour. It could mean seven.

IT was 10 minutes to seven when Dr. Harvey Robertson stopped in amazement, staring at a blood-stained, haggard, wild-eyed man who had come in through the emergency entrance.

"Scott!" he cried. "My God! you've been in an accident."

Scott nodded. "I'm all right. The boy who is really hurt is being brought in on a stretcher. He's had a nasty blow on the head. I've got to get up to the dressing room to get into some linen."

"You can't mean you're going to handle this case. Man alive, you are in no shape—I'd be glad to take it over for you. Or maybe, there's someone else—"

Scott broke in, grimly. "Thanks, but this is my job. I'm going to put something more into pulling this boy through than a man ordinarily gives to a case. And I'm risking something more precious to me than my life to do it. Harvey I need help—"

"You know I'll be glad to do what I can."

"Get into your car and drive like the devil to the Cameron home at 1800 Magnolia and bring my wife back with you!"

He got his hat and went out into the court in the rear of the building to get his car. Two of his colleagues, Dr. Charles Warwick and Dr. Phillip Stern, were coming in together. They stopped and spoke to him.

"Your busy day over, Robertson?" Dr. Warwick asked.

"No."

He didn't relish his mission and some of his distaste was in his voice. "I made a promise to look after something for Stanley. He's all cut up over something he's brought in an accident case I figure he figured in it, some way."

"Probably been drinking," said Dr. Stern. "Suppose you've heard his divorced wife is getting married tonight."

"Good heavens, not!"

"What was it Stanley wanted you to do?" Dr. Stern asked.

"Nothing of any importance," Dr. Robertson answered. "Just a small errand . . . well, good night."

HE went toward his car, waited until the two men had entered the hospital, and then slowly retraced his steps.

It was a good thing he had bumped into the two men. It was queer he hadn't suspected Scott was drinking. And here he had been planning to humor a man who probably didn't realize what a crazy request he was making.

It would have been a pretty come-off if he had walked into the wedding and commanded the bride to accompany him to meet her former husband!

It would have been something he would never have lived down. He got off on the fourth floor. Miss Hazelton, Stanley's anesthetist, was hurrying along the corridor. That meant he was going to operate. You had to admire him for character and cool nerve. Feeling responsible in some way for the smash up and determined to put the boy together again.

Miss Reid, floor supervisor, looked up when he passed her desk and spoke.

"The automobile accident case—pretty serious?" he asked.

"Rather, doctor. Intracranial hemorrhage. But he'll have a fine chance. Dr. Stanley's operating."

Dr. Robertson walked on. The hospital staff certainly had confidence in Stanley. Well, he was a mighty keen young surgeon. And after awhile he was going to come out of that operating room and he'd have to tell him something. He would say something important had come up preventing him from going on Scott's mission. A man had his own professional standing to consider. And it was easy enough to make mistakes. It would be a mistake to antagonize Ronnie Moore.

He was feeling uncomfortable for some reason. It was a feeling that surely had no logic connected with it. But he was worried, logic or not.

Scott's face kept coming before him. There had been something haunted, trapped about it.

Who Walks With Beauty

Who walks with beauty holds inviolate
The guarded secrets of the years to come,
Sons unborn Aprils crowding at the gate
Of living gardens white with petaled plums;
Sifts dust of rainbows through his finger tips
And kindles sunsets on the mountain range;
Holds shadow like pale jasmine to his lips
Grows intimate with all that once was strange.
Who walks with beauty has a banquet spread
Of silent white wine in crystal chalice,
Gold dawns and deep blue twilight for his bread,
For music, winds' slow rhythms in the trees,
His candles light the north, the south, the east,
And God for host at earth's eternal feast.—Selected.

Weekly Sunday School Lesson

A PROPHETIC VISION
Text: Luke 2:25-35, 40
The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for January 12.
By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

Our lesson is entitled "A Prophetic Vision," but it might well have been called "The Devout Soul."

Prophetic visions do not come by chance. The inner light is conditioned by the inner life. Of Simeon the priest it is said, "This man was righteous and devout." How much that expresses, and what a world this might be if all men were like Simeon!

Like all the righteous and devout Israelites of his age, Simeon's hope was placed upon the coming of the Messiah. He shared the great expectancy of his people, and in some way there had come to him the conviction that before his death he should see the Lord's coming.

It was in this spirit that he was ministering in the temple when Joseph and Mary brought the child Jesus to fulfill the customs of the law. It was in the performance of this ritual that Simeon was blessed with vision and was able to see that the child before him was the fulfillment of the Messianic hope.

We have seen how that hope, also, filled the heart of Mary, and of the wonderment that came into her life at the visit of the shepherds. Here again this sense of the destiny of the child that she brought into the world is intensified as she and Joseph hear the words of Simeon.

How Mary's heart must have thrilled as she heard Simeon say, "Behold, this child is set for the falling and the rising of many in Israel." But what strange forebodings there must also, have been in her mother's heart as she heard his further word, "Yea, and a sword shall pierce through thine own soul."

Do we not have here a sense both of the glory and the tragedy of motherhood? The mother gives to the world the child of her love, but the mother completely his life is devoted to others, the less is her sense of her own possession of him.

Here the mother is put to the crucial test: Will her delight in her child be the selfish joy that the child is hers and the satisfaction of keeping him to herself; or will it be the larger, richer joy that she has brought into the world a life that is to be a blessing to others?

Mary, apparently, faced this test with complete triumph. There must have been at times a sense of sadness and even of loneliness in her heart as she sensed the greatness of this child and the mission to which He was devoted. There must have been at times the longing to keep Him to herself.

But Mary's devotion was of the same quality as Simeon's. No child could have had a better earthly training. "The grace of God was upon him"—the grace of God that was upon Simeon and that is the possession of all who are righteous and devout.

Advertising Gets Vote of Confidence

More Reliable Than Verbal Salesmanship, Salesmen Themselves Say

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE

Associated Press Service Editor.

NEW YORK—(AP)—A high degree of confidence that newspaper advertising is reliable, found in a wide cross-section of the American public, was reported Thursday by Charles C. Stech in an advertising research study.

More than 5,000 persons from coast to coast were asked 15 questions about newspaper advertising by a corps of young women. The questions were put to oil field workers, housewives, radio announcers, physicians, lawyers, bartenders, beauty shop operators and many other categories.

The survey covered 21 states and 122 occupations. Five hundred answers

Centennial Plan Up to Bondholders

With Their Consent $125,000 Might Be Diverted From Refunding

LITTLE ROCK.—State officials and representatives of the Arkansas Centennial Commission agreed at a conference Thursday to start negotiations with holders of highway and road district bonds to ascertain whether they will consent to a proposed ap-came from California, Kansas, Michigan, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Massachusetts, Ohio, and Wisconsin furnished more than 100 answers each.

"To the question, 'Which do you usually consider more reliable, statements made by salesmen or advertisements in your daily newspaper?' 88 per cent declared for newspaper advertising. Even the majority of salesmen questioned agreed that newspaper advertising was apt to be more reliable and dependable than the average salesman."

"In answer to the question, 'Do you feel that a concern which spends money to advertise its brand is more likely to keep its product always up to standard than a concern which does not spend money to advertise its product?' 85 per cent said yes, which indicates one reason for the popularity of advertised brands."

Similar negotiations will be started with the State Board of Education and public school officials to determine whether they will waive payment of approximately $187,000 into the common school fund from the general revenue sinking fund until the latter part of 1936 so that amount can be appropriated for centennial purposes.

The unexpended and unpledged balance in the bond refunding fund is part of $1,408,000 which bondholders agreed could be used for specific purposes related to the highway program when the bond refunding law was drafted early in 1934. The act provides that any unexpended balance shall revert to the highway fund to be used to pay interest and to redeem bonds before maturity.
